1. Lawyers: Alternative Careers

In BC, lawyers advise clients on legal matters, draft legal documents and represent clients before courts, tribunals and administrative bodies. You work in law firms, federal, provincial and municipal governments and various businesses or you may be self-employed.

You may find that your international training and experience as a lawyer are not immediately recognized in B.C. The skills you have acquired as a lawyer (negotiation skills, logical and analytical mind, strong verbal communication skills, able to work well under pressure) can be used in these alternative careers:

- paralegal
- legal administrative assistant
- mediator
- public policy analyst / policy researchers & program officer
- bailiff

2. Employment Outlook

Industry sources report that there is currently demand for paralegals in the province. Organizations that hire paralegals, such as those offering real estate, financial, insurance and legal services, are expected to expand as the need for their services increases due to population growth.

Job Openings Outlook in BC

The employment outlook is good for legal administrative assistants with hands-on practical experience and knowledge in various areas of legal practice. Individuals with training and experience in litigation, corporate, estate and conveyance procedures, as well as those with strong computer and communication skills, are in higher demand.
